i say

Each week we'll choose readers' responses to share. This week we want to know: what would you do if you were rich?

I would donate most of it to charity, and then save some of it to pay for my university fees.

Though it may sound like a far-fetched idea, I would use the rest of the money to invest in green cars for our city. I would also use some of the money to plant more fruit trees around the city, so that homeless people always have something free to eat.

If I had a million dollars ...

I would give some of the money to my parents, and some of it to charity.

My parents have taken care of me my whole life, and I want to be able to say thank you and show them how much I love them. The reason I want to donate some of the money to charity is that there are many people struggling to make ends meet - even people you already know. They may have medical expenses or tuition fees they need to pay, and I'd like to help out wherever I can.

I would use part of the money to buy school supplies for students in poor countries who may not otherwise get them. I would then use another chunk of the money to buy a nice watch for my dad and an expensive handbag for my mum, as they both work very hard for my family and I want to show them how much I appreciate it.

I would build a candy factory.

I know it's a bit unrealistic, but I have always wanted one ever since I read the book Charlie and the Chocolate Factory. In the book, there is a character named Willy Wonka who owns a chocolate factory. He makes lots of weird and wonderful chocolates and sweets. I would love for this factory to be real. Chocolate can make people happy and I want to be able to spread joy and laughter.

I would also donate sweets to those who are less privileged, because everyone deserves to have a treat. Chocolate can't solve all the world problems, but it can put a smile on someone's face.

I would travel all over the world. There are around 190 countries in the world and it would be amazing if I could visit all of them.

It would take a lot of planning, and would cost a lot of money, but it would be a lot of fun. I don't know much about other languages or cultures but I would love to learn. I want to know about the customs in different countries, and what people eat every day.

One place I would really like to visit is the US, because there are lots of landmarks I would like to see, like the Statue of Liberty in New York City.

If only I really did have a million dollars, then I could go on this amazing trip.

I would travel around the world with my family. The place I'd most like to visit is Vienna, the city of music. I would love to finally be able to cross it off my bucket list.

I would use some of my money to help the victims of wars or natural disasters around the world, so that they can have access to food, shelter, medical care. I would then use some of the money to treat myself to a couple of my favourite computer games.

I would build a giant shelter for those in need of somewhere to stay. There would be dorms for people to sleep in, and fun facilities like a football pitch, basketball court, and TV and computer room. There would also be a canteen so that people can have a decent hot meal. There would also be English and Chinese classes for anyone who wants to improve their reading and writing skills.
